

The Camino Begins – Sharing Our Journeys

This Sabbath we're going to try a different topic and a different format. It's an experiment. It could be a disaster, it could look like a disaster and we discover penicillin, or it could just be fun.

This is a kind of ShareVision and the format runs like this:

One of us, say Jim, has a turn. He gets this time to talk about the books, movies, texts, people who have informed or are informing his spiritual journey from the time he was three until now-ish. We listen. When he finishes his sharing, we get a chance to raise our electronic hands and ask him questions we may have come up with about those tools-of-the-journey. The hypothetical Jim answers. Then each of us gets a chance to share our thoughts and appreciations of what we've heard from Jim...and the next person offers to share.

I will give you an example...from me of course...when I was a very little I remember a mix of Uncle Arthur's stories, Charlton Heston at the Red Sea, felt boards, and songs....they affected me inways...as I got older there was "A Wrinkle in Time".... etc...

If this works, we can do it more than once. If you are too uncomfortable, I have a back up...

Meanwhile, I wish you gentle blessings as we begin this holiday season.

Catherine
